Location & Local Information

Just off the coast of Croatia, the beautiful island of Brač is one of the largest islands in the Adriatic. Accessible via a direct ferry connection from Split, it's famous for producing the white stone which was used to construct that city's landmark Diocletian's Palace.

A wonderful place for enjoying the great outdoors, Brač impresses with its beaches, vineyards and mountains. You can soak up the best views on the island at Vidova Gora, north of Bol on Brač's southern coast. At 778m, it's the highest peak on all the Adriatic islands. Near Bol, you'll find one of Brač's most popular beaches – great for surfing, Zlatni Rat is notable for the way it extends into the Adriatic.

On the northern coast, Supetar is the largest town on Brač. Its attractive harbour has more than a few restaurant terraces to get acquainted with, while Supetar's medieval streets offer shops and cafés, as well as an 18th-century church. The town's cultural hub is the National Library which includes the Ivan Rendić Gallery, hosting a variety of sculptures and sketches from the famed artist, who was born locally. All sorts of exhibitions, events and concerts also take place at the venue.

Island cuisine is well represented at a number of good restaurants around Supetar, and you can get to know more about local food and its history through organised tasting tours. Among Brač's favourites are local seafood, lamb and wine, and the island also has its own cake, hrpač uša, which originated in the village of Dol.

Excursions you could take include a boat trip to the neighbouring island of Šolta, which only takes about 20 minutes from Milna. Be sure to visit the award-winning destination of Maslinica when you arrive, where you will find beautiful pine woods and secluded beaches.

Back on the mainland, Split is surely a must. As well as the huge Diocletian's Palace complex, which is so large it houses several other notable attractions, streets and squares within its walls, you will want to check out the Riva waterfront and green heart of the city, Marjan Forest Park. You can also explore cultural gems such as the Meštrović Gallery or the Split Gallery of Fine Arts.

It is also possible to take a ferry across to Makarska. This glamorous riviera resort is great for nightlife, beaches and mountain adventures, thanks to its proximity to the mighty Biokovo. You can also eat well in Makarska, whether you choose the waterfront restaurants or one of the traditional konoba taverns dotted around the region.
