Overview

A charming 3-bedroom villa in the village of Draževica on Brač island, Villa Nerežišća is ideal for up to six guests. At just 8km from Supetar, where you have ferry connections back to Split on the Croatian mainland, it enjoys both a convenient and quiet location. Villa Nerežišća comes with a pretty outdoor terrace and pool.

Around 10 minutes' drive from the beach, this villa offers privacy and peace on its terrace, shaded by trees and bushes. You have a heated pool of 24 sq m and a sun deck with loungers right beside it, as well as a shower.

A covered area with dining table and chairs and a barbecue is also adjacent to the pool, and there is a second dining space in the open air just a few steps away – a particularly pleasing spot. Next to this is a large, comfy swing chair that is perfect for relaxing in the sun.

You can step straight inside from the poolside dining terrace, as fresh air and natural light floods into the house. The open-plan living area is air-conditioned and offers two comfy sofas and a dining table with seating for eight. You'll have entertainment in the form of a flatscreen TV and PS4, while the kitchen area has all you need, including a fridge, coffee machine and dishwasher.

A king-size bedroom and a family bathroom are also found on the ground floor, while the two remaining bedrooms are upstairs. Both are equipped with TV, air-conditioning and king-size bed, and enjoy lovely views of the surroundings. These two rooms share a family bathroom with shower on the same floor.

The scenic island of Brač has much to offer. You'll be just a short drive from its largest town, Supetar, where you will find a pretty harbour and medieval streets lined with cafés and restaurants. Other island highlights include the popular windsurfing beach of Zlatni Rat and the fantastic views from Brač's highest peak, Vidova Gora. You can also visit the neighbouring island of Šolta, or head back to the mainland to see the grand city of Split or the glamorous Makarska Riviera.

Location & Local Information

One of the largest islands in the Adriatic, beautiful Brač is nonetheless less visited than Hvar or Korčula to the south. With pretty harbours and forested areas, Brač is perhaps most famous for its beautiful white stone which was used to construct Diocletian's Palace. You will find this local marvel in Split, just across the water.

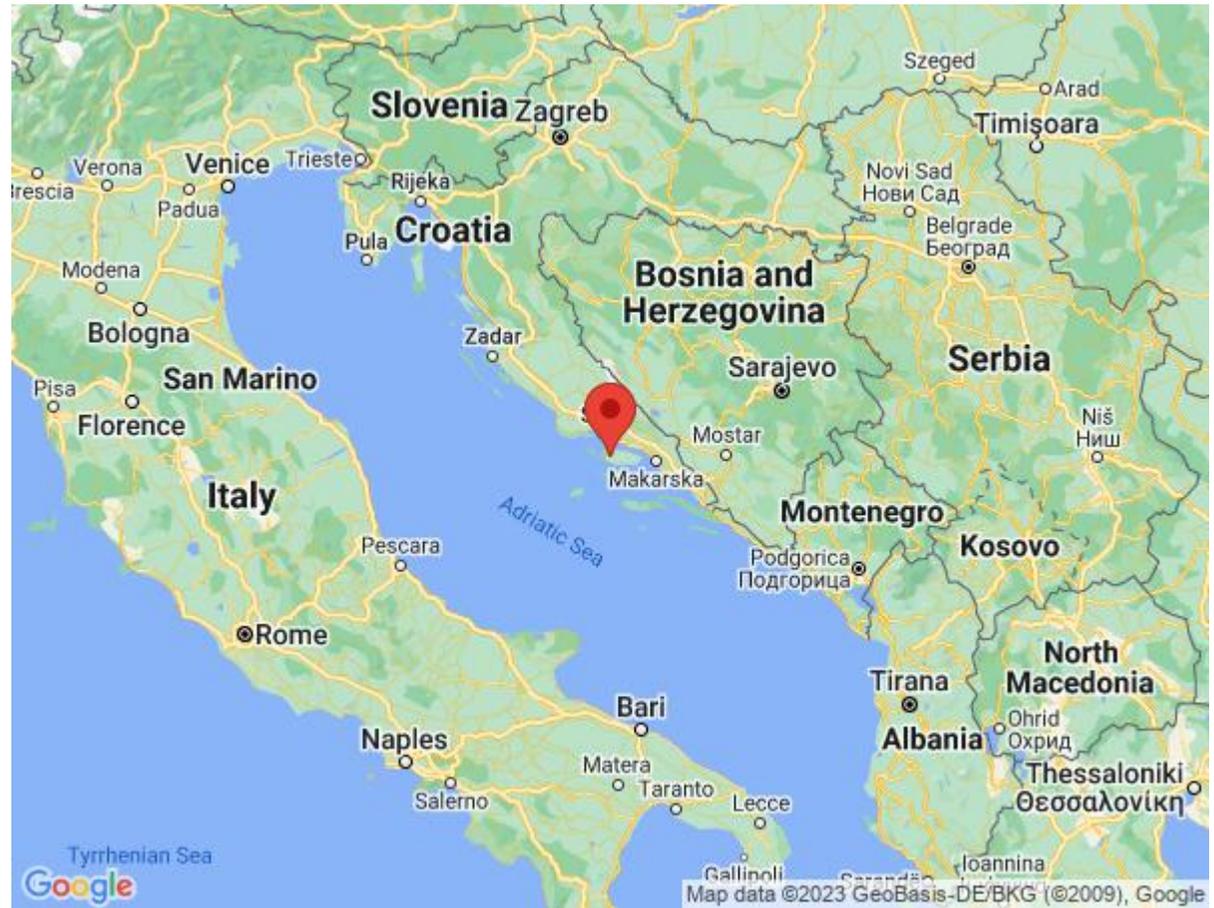

It's very easy to combine your trip to Brač with visits to the mainland, as regular ferry services connect Brač to the major centres of Split and Makarska. The island impresses with its numerous beaches, vineyards and mountains, and you can get the best views on the island at Vidova Gora, the highest peak on all the Adriatic islands, at a mighty 778m. You'll find it just north of Bol, on Brač's southern coast. Near Bol lies one of Brač's most popular beaches, Zlatni Rat which extends into the Adriatic and is ideal for windsurfing.

You may arrive on Brač at Supetar, its largest town, on the opposite coast. The town has plenty to stop for, including a pretty harbour and medieval streets which are home to shops and charming cafés, as well as an 18th-century church.

To visit the neighbouring island of Šolta, you can take a catamaran trip from Milna to Rogač. On arrival, be sure to visit the award-winning destination of Maslinica with its beautiful pine woods and secluded, rocky beaches – well worth the 20-minute crossing.

It takes a bit longer to get back to the mainland, but there's a lot to see in Split. As well as the huge Diocletian's Palace complex, which is so large it houses several other notable attractions, streets and squares within its walls, the city provides cultural big-hitters like the Split Gallery of Fine Arts and the Meštrović Gallery, and the glorious green spaces of Marjan Forest Park. There is also the chic waterfront quarter, Riva – a fine place for drinks and dining.

If you cross to Makarska, you'll find another upscale waterfront, a long, pebble beach and lots of nightlife. With the Biokovo Mountains in the background, this popular resort is also a favourite with adventure-seekers – it's great for paragliding, climbing, hiking and the like.
