Location & Local Information

Surrounded by pine forests and the stunning Sakar Tepe mountains, Akyaka is a scenic town on Turkey's south-western coast. Once a quiet fishing village, its popularity has grown in recent years, but it retains a relaxed feel.

Akyaka sits on a hill overlooking Gökova Bay, giving it particularly magnificent sea views. The beach area draws plenty of visitors in summer, and offers great opportunities for dining and water sports. The upper village area, away from the beach, offers more amenities, shops and restaurants. A couple of times a week, you will also find street markets, which are good for trying local treats like homemade burek pastries or gosleme pancakes.

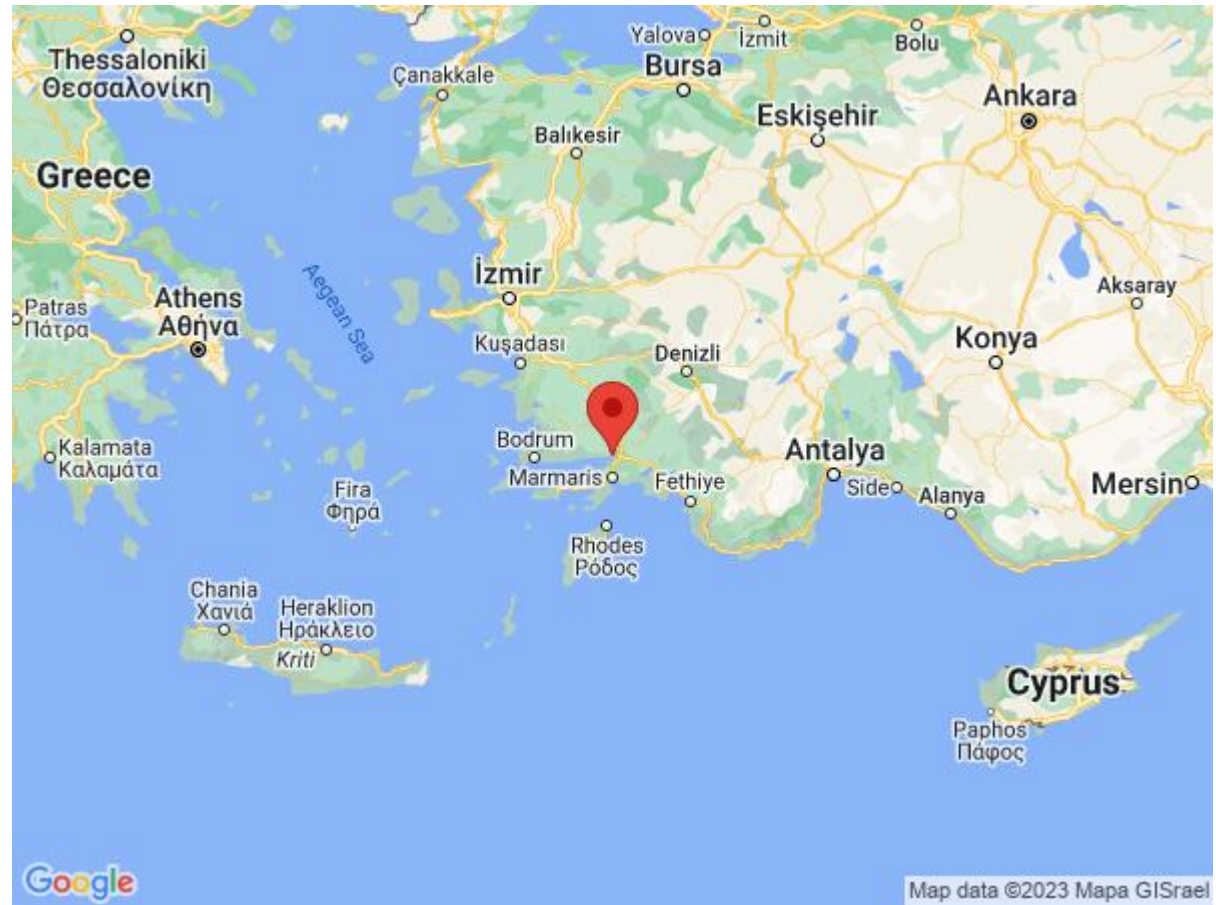

Despite its increased popularity, Akyaka has resisted over-development, and is a proud member of the global 'slow towns' movement, Cittaslow. It owes its distinctive architectural style to poet, journalist and architect, Nail Çakırhan, who built a much-admired house in Akyaka in the 1980s. The low-rise, wooden house with intricate details ended up winning a prestigious architecture award, and the style has been much imitated since.

A boat trip along the River Azmak is a lovely way to see Akyaka at its best. You can look right down into the deep waters, spotting colourful fish as you go. Walking along the river is also very pleasant, and there are regular restaurant stops along the way.

You can find lots of outdoor activities around the Akyaka area. In nearby Akçapınar, there's a great kite-surfing beach – you can book lessons in advance if you want to give it a try. Paragliding and kayaking are also popular.

Another visitor favourite are the cruises out to Cleopatra Island. Departing regularly, you can go and see the ancient remains of the city of Kedrai on the island, which date back to the 6th century BC. Closer to Akyaka are more places of archaeological interest, as the Carian city of Idyma once stood where the town is now. The rock tombs, on the road from Akyaka to Gökova, are of particular note.

Not so far away, look out for the Akyaka Olive Farm. One of the town's main attractions, this charming farm offers all sorts of olive oil-based goodies and has a lovely restaurant terrace right beside the river.
