Location & Local Information

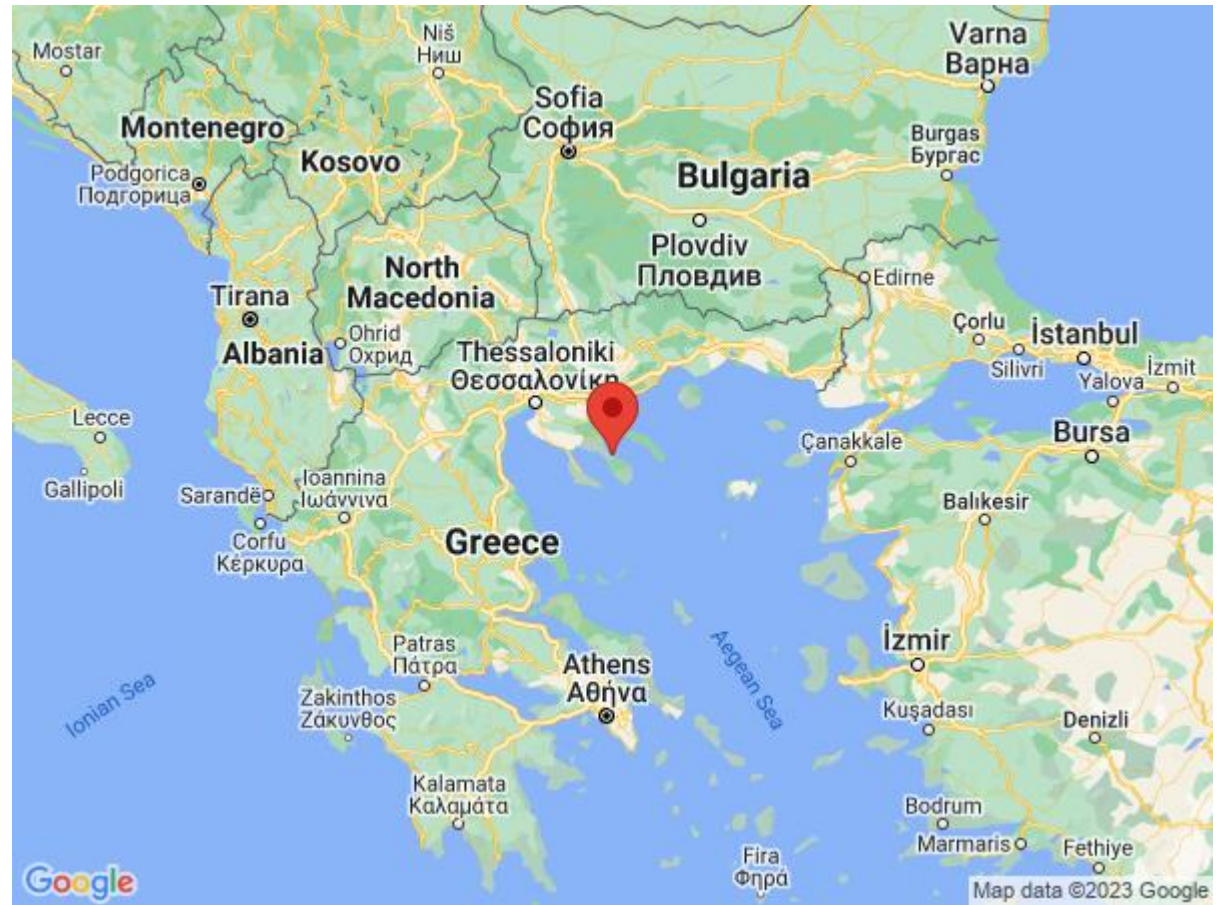

Halkidiki is a region famous for its three striking peninsulas, encompassing dense pine forests, traditional villages, magical islands and serene, sheltered bays.

With an archipelago made up of nine islands, the village of Vourvourou (located in Sithonia, the 'second finger' of the Halkidiki peninsulas) is a truly enchanting example of all of the natural beauty that this little-known gem of the Aegean coastline has to offer. Whether you want to spend the day sunbathing before dinner at your local taverna, or exploring secluded coves and inlets by boat before a picnic on an uninhabited island, the pristine turquoise waters of Vourvourou Bay are a fine place to start.

The sandy beaches and calm waters may provide plenty of temptation to stay on the mainland, but a boat trip around the nearby islands is really not to be missed. There are plenty of options for boat rentals to be found along the main beach, or at the northern end of the bay. Boats can be rented without a license here, giving you ample time to cruise the crystal-clear waters, stopping at your leisure to swim or snorkel near hidden beaches. If you would prefer to sit back and relax, take one of the many island cruises offered to visitors.

Whichever way you decide to spend your time on the water, make sure that a visit to Diaporos is on the agenda. The largest of Vourvourou's cluster of islands, Diaporos offers a truly exotic getaway. The island draws visitors in with its stunning blue lagoon, where the crystalline waters must be seen to be believed. Make sure to bring some drinks and snacks with you for the trip, as you will not want to leave this Halkidiki treasure in a hurry. On land, the island's terrain is made for hiking and nature enthusiasts, with trails from the beach taking you through Diaporos' gorgeous woodland. Don't forget to stop off at Myrsini Beach, a paradise picnic spot under the shade of the pine trees.

It is of course worth exploring the other islands of Vourvourou, such as Agios Isidoros, Ampelitsi and Peristeri (this little islet is less than one kilometre in length, with its own beautiful lighthouse from which you can look back at the views of the bay). After a day spent island hopping, make your way back to the mainland in time to soak up the sunset from your villa before a well-earned dinner at one of Vourvourou's excellent restaurants.
